Stewardship 2018: Time, Talent & Treasure

As a part of stewardship, we hope that each member of our Sheridan community will make a pledge of time, talent and treasure before Lent begins in February.

We ask everyone in our Sheridan community to reflect and take a deeper look at their Christian commitment regarding their personal finances and their time. Any contemplation and evaluation is made better by information.

Each Sheridan member or friend is encouraged to let Sheridan know how you wish to continue to serve or areas in which you wish to become more involved. This is done by prayerfully completing a Ministry Opportunity Sheet. While this isn't a list of each way you could serve, the sheet can be a catalyst for matching giftedness to areas in which to serve.

We would ask that these items be prayerfully completed each year and returned to the Sheridan church office by Feb. 11.

If you have questions about any of these Stewardship materials, please contact the church office.

Stewarding the Good

IN 2017 A HARVARD UNIVERSITY STUDY REVEALED that parents who raised “good” kids have some particular things in common. As parents they did some specific things well and they effectively stewarded their parental responsibilities. What is interesting is that these parents worried less about being “liked” by their kids and more about instilling certain attitudes and behaviors. While this is good news for today’s parents, it is also affirming news for each of us. The true lesson for each of us is in how we might be good stewards of our own living.

The common traits identified in “successful” parents are that they spend quality time with their children, show themselves to be a quality role model for their children, teach their children to care for others, set high ethical expectations, encourage their children to practice gratitude and teach their children to see the big picture. Over the course of January and February we will study these traits and how we can best steward ourselves toward “the good life.”

January usually includes spending time reflecting on the bigger picture. At Sheridan we will collectively reflect on how well we are doing with the good that we’ve been given. Using the principles from the Harvard University study, we will examine what characteristics we ought to be exhibiting to our children. We know, if we can master these we will have become better stewards of our whole life, including our time, talent and treasures.

The bond of a mentor

by Pastor Greg Bouvier

Janece with her two mentees

Can you imagine having no one in your life who consistently wished for you the best without the burden of expectations? For many young people these days, having a mentor is an amazing gift because they have no other source of unconditional positive regard. January is National Mentoring Month and the story of Janece Nelson and her mentee, "Jill" (not her real name) is a story of just such inspiration.

Janece began mentoring Jill seven years ago, when she was just a fifth-grader. Jill was a good student, but never applied herself in school. With a home life that did not support her, Jill was regularly absent. Truancy became such a problem that Jill was taken from the home at different times over the years. Janece kept at it and continued to visit Jill, listening, learning and giving Jill one person who had placed no expectations on her acceptance. This made Janece different than Jill's parents, guardians and teachers.

At one point Jill travelled out of state to visit family. She chose not to return to school. Janece continued to call the school to no avail. No one in the school system knew where Jill had gone. Janece finally contacted the TeamMates of Lincoln Chapter office. They offered to assign Janece a different mentee and Janece replied, "If anyone needs me, she does." The Chapter office went above and beyond and was able to locate Jill at Boys Town. With the help of TeamMates, Janece resumed their mentoring relationship. When reunited, both Jill and Janece shared tears, thankful to be together again.

You can read the whole story on our website:

sheridanlutheran.org/media-resources/news.

January is National Mentoring Month

If you would like to join the 43 members of Sheridan's community who are currently TeamMates mentors, please contact Pastor Greg Bouvier at g.bouvier@sheridanlutheran.org or talk to Janece, for she has a wonderful story to tell!
